Bear Heart was a young member of the Dakota tribe. It was summer and he was collecting blueberries and potatoes to eat. But he really wanted to hunt buffalo. His father, Yellow Hawk, said he wasn't old enough. However, he offered to take Bear Heart with him while he looked for good places to hunt. The next morning, Yellow Hawk said they would walk along the river, looking and listening for buffalo herds. As they walked, Yellow Hawk told his son about the buffalo. The animals gave them food, hide for teepees and clothing, and weapons. That was why the Dakota respected the buffalo. Finally, Bear Heart saw a full-grown buffalo by the river. Yellow Hawk said he would come back with the hunters, and they turned to leave. But the buffalo had seen them, too! It ran toward them, and they had to climb a tree to escape. Back at home, Bear Heart told his mother he would be a great hunter one day and carry on Dakota traditions.
