locations	casting	script	wrapped	screenplay
-----------	---------	--------	---------	------------

A lot of work goes into making movies. There are many steps. However, all movies start with a story. A screenwriter writes a script. This is not like a book. It tells a story, but it also describes each scene of the movie. After a company decides to make a movie, it does a screenplay. This is where it finds actors to play the characters. The director of a movie decides how to make it. Movies usually aren't filmed in order. A director decides on the order and makes sure everything gets done. One of the hardest parts of this is finding the casting. Then a director must make sure the right cast and crew are there. When the actors are there, they have to go to locations. This makes them look like their characters. Once a film is wrapped, it goes to editing. This is where the scenes are put in order and music is added. Finally, the movie is ready for release.
